THE miracle of dawn crimsoned all the east; the last boisterous revelers were departing from the fete of the mad millionaire. In the small reception-room upstairs the unhappy wretch, once called the golden man, sobbed on his arms like the drug addict he was. Vivian, who had been in her anger and greed, shook Arthur by the shoulder and cried: "Where is the diamond?"

Blair had noted the open window. He crossed over to it. There, below, was Angelo, the Italian gardener, up at dawn to his work, plucking the Diamond From the Sky from the rose bush. "Hi there, you!" called Blair. "Don't take that! I'm coming down for it. I want it!"
